"A meteor that exploded over Russia was 30 times brighter than the sun, with the force of 40 Hiroshima atom bombs, said scientists.

Their analysis confirmed the meteor crash was the biggest in a century.

The 62ft wide missile exploded in a fireball above the city of Chelyabinsk on February 15, causing damage up to 50 miles away, At its fastest, it was travelling at more than 40,000 mph.

The space rock blew apart 18,5 miles above the city, briefly outshining the sun and inflicting severe burns on a number of observers below. Fortunately, the meteor came in at an angle to spread its energy sideways, creating less damage on the ground.

Peter Brown, a physics professor at the University of Western Ontario in Canada, has collected around 500 videos of the event which injured around 1,500 people as glass windows shattered in the post-explosion shockwave." dailymail.co.uk
